"Every one of our technicians possesses an artistic talent, a passion for helping others and an interest in dental health science," says New Mexico native Kevin Cassady, owner of Rocky Mountain Dental Laboratory and a dental laboratory technician for more than 35 years. The experienced team at Rocky Mountain realizes their dentist clients expect a dental restoration that maximizes production time as well as the profitability of their practice.

Rocky Mountain excels in the area of cosmetic all-ceramic crowns and bridges. It was New Mexico's first such dental laboratory with an in-house CAD/CAM design and milling center, says Cassady. The lab specializes in cosmetic and full-mouth reconstruction cases featuring all-ceramic dental restorations, and produces its own traditional alloy-based crowns and bridges. For maximum quality control, all products are designed and created on-site, and are never outsourced elsewhere in or out of the United States.

Each of Rocky Mountain's owners personally performs daily case pick up and deliveries, says Cassady. The lab assigns a permanent, "private team" to each dentist or practice it serves — a group of technicians specifically matched with the client's individual needs. "As a result, a typical Rocky Mountain Dental Lab client has been with us for an average of 19+ years," he adds.
